VISIT, CHINA-JAPAN TALKS AT ASEAN, DALAI LAMA, JOURNALISTS' RIGHTS, UK PM BROWN VISIT

Classified By: Deputy Chief of Mission Dan Piccata. Reasons 1.4 (b/d).

Summary

¶11. (C) At the November 23 bi-weekly G-5 Chiefs of Mission gathering, French Ambassador Herve Ladsous reported that French President Nicholas Sarkozy will discuss with Chinese leaders the sale of two third-generation European Pressurized Reactor (EPR) nuclear reactors, an investment protection agreement, a product safety agreement and global financial imbalances during his November 25-27 visit. Japanese Ambassador Yuji Miyamoto said Prime Minister Yasuo Fukuda raised the East China Sea talks with Premier Wen Jiabao on the sidelines of the recent ASEAN Summit in Singapore. Miyamoto said China's new ambassador to Japan, Cui Tiankai, raised the recent visit of the Dalai Lama during his first meeting with PM Fukuda. Fukuda told Cui that "the best foreign policy on the Dalai Lama would be for China not to speak about him so much." German Ambassador Michael Schaefer said Germany's bilateral relationship with China has been "systematically sidelined" by the PRC because of Chancellor Angela Merkel's recent meeting with the Dalai Lama. Head of the Organizing Committee for the 2008 Olympic Games Liu Qi told visiting UK Olympics Minister Tessa Jowell that China "would not turn back the clock" on journalists' rights after the Games. Sarkozy will tell the PRC that it must tackle global issues such as imbalances in world finance, trade and major currencies, said Ladsous. Sarkozy will call for more "harmonious" management of sovereign wealth funds. The French hope for a statement on climate change, though Ladsous reported that any statement would be general rather than specific, because the Chinese "cannot be moved" on the point.
